In a new development for Reviews in History, Daniel Snowman talks to Miranda Seymour about her new book, Noble Endeavours: Stories from England; Stories from Germany, her career as a historian, historical novelist and biographer, and the issues surrounding collective biography and prosopography.

Miranda Jane Seymour is an English literary critic, novelist, and biographer, and Noble Endeavours is a cultural history of Anglo-German relations from 1613 to the present day.

Daniel Snowman is a writer, lecturer and broadcaster on social and cultural history.

You can listen to an extract from the interview which deals with the book itself here [2], or alternatively the full hour-long conversation is available here [3].
