Knox, John (c. 1514–1572), religious reformer, was born at Giffordgate in Haddington. His mother was a Sinclair, a name he occasionally adopted as an alias when in hiding, and his father was William Knox, whose family had a long and proud tradition of service to the earls of Bothwell. William, probably an elder brother, was the only other known member of his immediate family. John seems to have been educated in the local burgh school and, though not taking a degree, continued his studies at St Andrews University where he was taught by John Mair, the great scholastic thinker who had returned there in 1528. Pursuing a conventional career pattern, Knox entered the church, being ordained deacon and priest in the late 1530s by William Chisholm, bishop of Dunblane. Using his training in canon law, by 1540 he was practising as a notary in and around Haddington.

An illustration of a library interior. In the foreground, a person with red hair and glasses is sitting at a desk, reading a book. A laptop is open on the desk next to them. Behind them are tall bookshelves filled with books of various colors. A globe is on one of the shelves. To the left, there are more bookshelves with books and a small plant. The overall style is a flat, colorful illustration.

This powerful and original book locates the anti-police violence that spread across England in 1980-1 within a longer struggle against racism and disadvantage faced by black Britons, which had seen a growth in more militant forms of resistance since the Second World War. It explains these disturbances as 'collective bargaining by riot' – attempts to increase political inclusion by this marginalised group. Through case studies of Bristol, Brixton and Manchester, the book explores the actions of community organisations in the aftermath of disorders. Highlighting the political activities of black Britons and the often-problematic reliance upon 'official' sources when forming historical narratives, it demonstrates
